FRANKEN

The Franken wine region is located in the German state of Bavaria (Bayern). It extends between the cities of Aschaffenburg and Schweinfurt and runs along the Main River.

15,320 acres (6,200 hectares) 14,793,632 gallons (560,000 hectoliters) of wine are produced annually in Franken. This accounts for 6% of the German wine production.

The region experiences warm, dry summers and long cold winters. Because of this, late ripening grapes, such as the Riesling, play only a small role here due to the risk of frost damage.

Soil types vary throughout the region and include weathered rock, colored sandstone, shell-limestone, and keuper (colored and/or gypsum marl).

93% of the acreage here is dedicated to white grapes. (Müller-Thurgau 43%, Silvaner 20%, Bacchus 11.%, Kerner 6%, Riesling 4% and finally Spätburgunder 2%)

Franken wines are generally dry, earthy, and spicy. A dry wine in Francen is defined by a residual sugar of no more than 4 grams per liter.

43% of the Franken wines are bottled in a uniquely shaped bottle, called a Bocksbeutel. The bottle is shaped with a round, flat body and a short neck
